stood?

Maybe—beginning dusty and rough,
It keeps up the pretense just long enough
To tire those who haven't the clew,
And leave the adventure—and end—to you?
Maybe it leaves the highway to follow
Up, swooping up like the flight of a swallow—
Till valley and town lie dim below,
And Time files far on the winds that blow,
There you may find a nook for your dream!
Seeming,
Just planned for you from the Edenglow.

So the little road cries to me: "Follow, follow Maybe you'll find that your dreams are bollow Maybe you'll see—but follow, follow, Come with the faith of the homing swallow, Or, to your death, you will never know."

Here and There.

It is quite the fashion now for univer sities, museums and other like institutions to send out parties grave robbing. A favorite place for this pastime is up on the River Nile in Ethiopia. The kings of that country took great pride in sepulture. They are all dead now, how ever, and so are their descondants, therefore these parties are pretty bold in their robbery. They ought to be ashamed, quite likely, but they are very curious about the family life of these defunct nobles, and seeing they can't be "peeping Toms," they become digging Toms and intend to dig out the skeletons these old kings thought they had hidden in their closets. Dr. George A. Reisner of Harvard University heads one of these expeditions, and he has made a find at El-Kur'uw on the upper Nile. Mrs. William Mason recently. Here is a whole cemetery of kings, beginning 750 B. C. and extending down have been spending a few days to 250 B. C. Along with the graves of field. the kings were those of their wives and can tell about what they thought of them. Some they evidently thought had gone to heaven; and some, it seems, they hoped had gone to the other place, -that is, if they could skip it. One, at least, King Piankhy, thought rather more of his horses than he did of his wives; that is, he gave them better tombs. There is another reason for this less they were those he thought fit for heaven. He took those along with him when he died; also his horses—all of them. He meant to ride in state in the Ethiopian spirit land. In the burying ground at El-Kur'nw there are four rows of horse tombs-Plankhy led in giving vent to his passion for horses and town now. other kings followed.

Shoe Style

The style of shoe that you select is the consummation of perhaps weeks of drafting and planning by the Douglas Shoe Company's staff of designers. A little higher toe on the one last, a trifle less curve here and , a little more there; a few more stitches somewhere else; all of these details contribute to the authority of Douglas Style. Yet style is but one of the factors by which Douglas Shoes have attained their present place. Capable New England shoe men, possessing a rare skill that is both inherited and acquired, insure the quality from which public confidence is engendered. We are proud to be the Douglas agents for this vicinity, and the prices are a comfort to all who are seeking a good shoe.

What matter if you mark the daily round
Of irritating duties and concerns,
When from the festive board the family ind leaves us, maidless, to you chained and in your bright depths may be ceramic art, Venetian glass, or shining sliver line; luggesting tinking music and beauty of design, or happy table-talk and jolly laughter; Phroughout the world you play your humble part. Llas, Dishpani We love you—'cause we hafter. —Louise S. Hiscox.

Thrift Forty Years Ago. Not long ago I sat talking with two fine-looking, middle-aged women, who had brought up their families, and were practice of economy in the "old days," comparing notes. In those times the wages were small, but the fathers exnected to get along with mother's help, and keep a small sum in the bank, even against hard times. There were no stores anywhere near the two friends, so if an emergency happened, say an un-expected party, or a sudden giving way of a child's clothes, the mothers had to lepend on their own resourcefulness and ard work.

"Do you remember," said Aunt Abby, "the dress you wore to Cousin Jane's "I guess I do," laughed Aunt Martha, and explained to me. "The four chil-dren were small and I hadn't been attending any social functions for a long time, and I didn't have a thing to wear. Abby and I went up attic to look around and finally found an extra pair of good, white, muslin curtains. By careful planning we made a nice white dress, and I had a blue ribbon for a sash, and went to the wedding quite suitably attired. I am sure no one knew I was wearing a pair of curtains."
"Another time," continued Aunt

Martha, "my five-year-old boy needed a best suit badly, and again I went to the attic. I found some green velvet sofa cushions and made the child a very becoming suit of cute velvet trousers and coat, such as used to be worn." "Oh, yes," said Aunt Abby, while listened in admiration at their make over efficiency, "we always made the children's mittens out of old woolen underwear, dyed a cheerful color, and baby's skirts out of dark flannel petticoats." "I remember you made a lovely bon net for your little girl out of your old beaver hat," smiled Aunt Martha, "you cut it smaller and lined it with pink, and put a tiny bunch of flowers at the top."
"The toys were mostly home made," meditated Aunt Abby, "the dolls were black stockings with outlined faces, or clothespins with pen and ink faces and fancy paper dresses. The father usually made some things from wood, and the biggest and best Christmas present of all was a pair of shiny rubber boots. The stockings were filled with a bean bag, some candy, an apple and an orange, and such little gifts." "Times are different, now," smiled the old friends, as Aunt Abby mused. "Now the children get elaborate toys and sick iresses, while rubber boots have ceased to be an awe-inspiring sight. Even old ladies, like me, are given silk stockings and silk bags and nice perfumes. Of course, I enjoy it, but I don't believe I should if I hadn't been thrifty in the rong, young part of my life."

As I said goodbye to my old friends ered if that was the reason the young olks of the "old days" could rear thei amilies of five to seven children and educate them, start them as honorable men and women and enjoy the years they pent in doing it. The young folks mar ied, expecting to be thrifty, to work and play hard together, to depend on their own brains and fingers to carry them through the hard places, and as a matter of course to keep a bit in the bank for the future. Many of the modern ways are far better than the olden ways, but in thrift I doubt if we now can show much better spirit than the "aunts" and riends of forty years ago.

Tried and Proven. There are some things we are so used doing that it seems as if every one in the world must know about them. Yet each was once a bright idea, thought of for the first time. Perhaps my bright ideas aren't just the same as other women's. Anyway, I know that they think of ever so many things that never entered my mind, for I am constantly readingabout them in American Cookery and other household magazines. Now, I'm passing on a few of my own particular ways—things that experience has taught me right here among my own pots and pans. They have all been tried and

The canned fruit, which we buy in tins, is greatly improved by being boiled for a few minutes, with the addition of a little sugar. It always takes a certain amount of sweetening to "bring out" and give zest to the acid of any fruit, and the factory-canned goods are rarely sweet enough, no matter how heavy the so-called syrup has been made with arrow-root or other thickening. They are seldom cooked enough, either, to be real tender and palatable, and the extra bolling with the sugar removes that unpleasant, leathery quality and makes the fruit exactly as if freshly stewed. A convenient, safe place for knives is thrust down into a strap of leather fastened on the wall over the place where they are most often used. Divide the length off into spaces to fit the knives by tacks driven in at intervals.

After emptying a tin can, immediately turn the cover down and in, so it wil not be the cause of any ugly cuts before it is finally disposed of.

A roll of toilet-paper, kept in the kitchen, is useful in many ways—for cleaning up "messes," wiping out greasy fry-pans and for greasing cake tins. An egg that is cracked may still be boiled without danger of its running ou of the shell. Turn the egg over and lightly tap it on the other side, so as to make another crack opposite the original one. It can then be put safely into boiling water, for forces are equalized. Don't be afraid to try this, for, though simple, it is really a good idea—especialy when eggs are at top prices. Potatoes can be roasted satisfactorily in the top of the range when the fire is too low to make a hot oven. Place the potatoes under one of the front covers at the side of the fire-box, and turn them several times during the baking.

A good substitute for dumplings, and good way to use up stale bread, is to place thick half, or quarter slices over the top of the stew and let them steam, with tightly closed cover, for a few min-utes before serving.

After the lettuce has been washed, and is ready to place on ice, it is much nore convenient to tie it up loosely in square of cheesecloth than to crowd it into the regulation bag; also, this way does not bruise the lettuce.

First of all, it bakes evenly from all directions in the oven-top, bottom and all sides. Then, the doors are locked tightly at three points, thus preventing the loss of heat. The oven has glass windows through which the interior is visible at all times. These windows are not easily broken, except by accident, and can be readily and cheaply replaced with ordinary glass.
